Mechanism Of Action

CNS stimulant medication, including Ritalin, works by increasing the levels of the two neurotransmitters in the brain called dopamine and norepinephrine.

It blocks the reuptake of neurotransmitters in the brain called dopamine and norepinephrine from the synapse, which increases their availability, and it also enhances the release of these neurotransmitters in the brain.

Unlike other antidepressant medications, which take around three hours to work. Ritalin has a relatively rapid onset of action, and it takes about 20 - 30 minutes to start working after the child swallows it.
